Biographical & Historical Information: Huron Portland Cement Company was established in 1907 at Detroit, Michigan with the principal place of operations, plant, and limestone quarries at Alpena. The first president of the company was John B. Ford who presided 1907-1939. The company has undergone several name changes and is still in operation, currently under the name Lafarge North America.

“Portland cement, so-called because it resembles in color stone from the Isle of Portland in the British Isles, was first produced in the United States in 1871, in Michigan in 1896. Because of Alpena's location in the midst of immense limestone deposits, the Huron Portland Cement Company, founded at Detroit in 1907, chose this site for its plant. Cement production began here in 1908. Able management and skilled workmen made this the world's largest cement plant. From Thunder Bay, ships of the Huron fleet deliver cement to all parts of the Great Lakes region.”

“Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor a business in my district that has enjoyed a proud history in northern Michigan. This month, Lafarge of North America's cement plant in Alpena, Michigan celebrates its 100th anniversary. For one hundred years, through three different owners, the Alpena cement plant has led the cement industry with innovations and served as an example of the industriousness of the people of northern Michigan.

The plant began as the Huron Portland Cement Company. The idea for the plant originated from Harry J. Paxton of Fenton, Michigan. While, during this time, Michigan had many young men full of entrepreneurial spirit, Mr. Paxton had a unique passion: Portland cement. He had learned to produce cement while managing a small mill at Fenton. Another one of the early cement pioneers in Alpena was John B. Ford, who served as the company's first president.

In January of 1907, Articles of Association were filed for the Huron Portland Cement Company in Lansing, Michigan. The purpose of the corporation was stated simply as “The Manufacture of Portland Cement.” Capital stock was listed as merely “twelve hundred thousand dollars” divided into twelve thousand shares of the par value of one hundred dollars. From these meager beginnings, the City of Alpena Michigan would grow into its nickname “Cement City.”

When the plant first started, stone from the quarries in Alpena were loaded by hand into horse-drawn wagons to be delivered to the plant. By these crude means, cement was produced in Alpena, loaded, again, by hand, into ships moored at Alpena's Thunder Bay. The cement was then transported across the Great Lakes to ports throughout the Midwest, where the product served as the basic fabric of America's economic growth and industrialization. As our great Nation paved its roads and built its highways, much of the cement used came from the Huron Portland Cement Company of Alpena, Michigan.

Over time, steam driven shovels and rail cars took the place of the horse-drawn wagons and human muscle. In turn, the steam driven shovels and rail cars were replaced by electric shovels and large haul trucks. Today, a large front-end loader and huge haul trucks are used to mine the rock. At Lafarge's modern plant, state-of-the-art electronics, computers and x-ray analyzers controlled by highly skilled and educated employees produce a high quality product with maximum efficiency.

Over the years, individuals with great vision, indeed, leaders of the cement industry, developed the cement plant in Alpena. There have been many significant technological developments at the Alpena plant. One of the most important was the invention of the air slide in the late 1940s. After the air slide patent was sold to the Fuller Company, it was refined and became a widely used piece of equipment in a number of industries.

The Alpena plant was also the first of two North American plants to use waste heat from its kilns to generate steam, which drives turbines producing electricity. In 4 days, the turbines produce enough electricity to power each residence in the county of Alpena for 3 weeks. In 1957, the plant was purchased by National Gypsum, which owned and operated the Alpena cement plant for nearly 30 years, until the plant was sold to Lafarge of North America.

Under Lafarge's leadership, the plant has continued to innovate. In recent years, the Alpena Plant has significantly reduced its use of the virgin natural resources it uses as raw material in the cement manufacturing process, replacing them with waste from other industries. This concept of reusing industries' waste for another industry's raw materials is called "industrial ecology," and LaFarge's Alpena Plant has been a pioneer in this area. This development provides another example of how Lafarge of Alpena has helped lead the North American cement industry into the future.

Madam Speaker, 100 years after it was built, the Alpena cement plant still towers over the City of Alpena and Thunder Bay. Today, the Alpena cement plant is the largest plant in Lafarge's North American portfolio, a testament to Lafarge's continued faith and investment in the people and community of Alpena.

While a century has passed, the Alpena cement plant remains standing as a physical tribute, a testament to the role northern Michigan and the City of Alpena has played in the cement industry and in our nation's economic growth. This week, the people of Alpena will celebrate 100 years of the plant's existence and their reputation as "Cement City." The workers--past and present--who have labored there as well as the plant's previous and current owner all deserve our enduring respect for their contributions to the cement industry's past, present and future. Madam Speaker, on the centennial celebration of the Alpena cement plant, I would ask that you and the entire U.S. House of Representatives join me in saluting this northern Michigan institution." - Representative Bart Stupak
